A New Governor A New Fight for Wisconsin Firearm Owners

Story by James Melville

Wisconsin has a new Governor in Tony Evers, and he is hostile to gun rights for law abiding citizens. Wisconsin governor's race was lost by gun friendly Scott Walker, while state republicans kept control of the assembly and state senate. Tony Evers has said he will make it harder for people to get concealed carry permits and by "possibly" strengthening training requirements under the law. Evers would like to reinstate the 48-hour waiting period for handguns.

But what is really worrying is Evers' Wishlist for gun control in Wisconsin:

- Universal background checks (total control to deny you your right to purchase guns for any reason they invent)
- State registry of firearms (gun owner registration list)
- Ban on certain accessories like bump stocks and so-called "high-capacity" mags ("Evers Calls for Tougher Gun Laws in Wisconsin" wpr.org)

"I think we have to be pragmatic here, we have to start someplace," Evers said. "We've had young people all across the country, people in high schools, saying, 'Enough is enough, the adults have to stand up and do something.'"

"Do something." Tony Evers stated

Not even a week into his term Wisconsin Gov. Tony Evers is joining with fellow Democratic Attorney General Josh Kaul in supporting a law allowing judges to take away firearms from people determined to be a threat to themselves or others. Calling it

Kaul voiced his support for a so-called "red flag" law during his inaugural speech Monday. And on Wednesday, Evers told reporters that he would also support such a law if there's documentation to prove that "someone is incapable of owning and using a firearm."

Scott Walker signing the Knife bill at the Wisconsin Firearm Owners annual meeting 2016.

Scott Walker was a gun governor, in 2011 he signed the state's concealed weapons law, making Wisconsin one of the last states to allow the practice. Along with three range protection acts, ended the 48-hour waiting period to buy a handgun, knife bill, several new pro hunting law and many more. WFO worked with Scott on several of these bills and will truly be misses.

Although our Wisconsin legislature has kept and even gained Republican, pro-gun majority. We still need to keep up the fight. In the past with Walker as governor and majority of Republicans, anti-gun bills have been attempted to be passed. With our influence in Madison we managed to stop these bills.

We need to stand strong and together in our fight.

Wisconsin Firearm Owners is the only progun organization that lobby's in Wisconsin. We are the only chartered NRA state association. Help us keep the pressure on our state legislature to retain our rights.

Wisconsin Firearm Owners is always looking for volunteers to testify at bill hearings in Madison. If interested contact Dale Anhalt at: dale@wisconsinforce.org

Personalized Precision — The Modern Smallbore Match Rifle

Report based on Lars Dalseide story in NRAblog

High-Tech Rimfire Rigs

If you watched the smallbore position and prone shooters at the 2016 Brazil Olympic Games, you couldn't help but notice the exotic rifles competitors were shooting. There were wood stocks, metal stocks, factory-built rifles and customized specials. Why are there are so many different design features and stock types? To answer this question, the NRAblog's editors called on Jessie McClain of the NRA Competitive Shooting Division.

"The customized rifles, like the Anschütz you showed me, can make a real difference in a shooter's performance," explained McClain. "I went from a decent shooter to making the varsity shooting team my freshman year because of the rifle." As Jessie explained, one new feature out there is the adjustable stock, which she called the Porsche of the shooting world. Fully adjustable from the butt plate to the check piece to the hand stop and risers and bolt knobs, this component is fully customizable to the athlete ... which can be a huge advantage. "Every person is different ... a customizable rifle fits anyone. A rifle team can purchase four of these and field a shooting team for years."

Model 1913 with
1918 Alu Precise Stock

The Modern Anschütz Position Rifle

Smallbore match rifle makers are using modern materials in response to the need for greater adjustability (and enhanced accuracy). One of the popular new designs is the Anschütz model 1913 position rifle with a "1918 ALU Precise" brushed aluminum stock. This looks like it has been crafted in an aircraft plant.

Adult Service Rifle Team Applicants

In 2018 Wisconsin Fire Arms had its first in many years an Adult Service Rifle Team. This was revived by Tom Jones of Harford WI.

Tom assembled a Six-person team of people he knows. The team shot at the National Service Rifle Match at Camp Perry Ohio.

The 2018 Match was shot out of competition with the following members shooting: Sgt Freddie Church USMC-Shooting and Caption, Tom Jones-Shooting and Coach, Brady Westling, Bryan Melville, Todd House and Randall Holterman.

With no funding and a quickly thrown together team they fared well with a score of 2737 – 62.

In 2019 Tom Jones is again taking the task of putting together another Service Rifle Team. This year they will be doing fund raising for the match fees and hope to get some more competitors interested in competing with the team.

6 Tips For Improving Rimfire Rifle Accuracy

by Jeremy Kisner, Team Area 419 - Monday, May 21, 2018

If you read my previous article then you're aware of some products that will amp up your rimfire rifle for a precision match. For this article, let's put things into practice with a few tips that will help you out at the next Practical Rimfire Challenge or NRL .22 LR match.

Even though these hints focus on the practical and/or tactical shooter who engages targets from 10-300 yards, some can apply to benchrest competition with a static distance as well.

1) An Appropriate Zero. Notice how I left it generic? The reason being is that your zero needs to be practical and useful for your particular shooting discipline. It comes down to what distances you are shooting and what might be the most frequent distance.

- For static distance: Possibly, you want your zero set at the distance you're always shooting and fine-tuned.
- For dynamic distances: By looking at my ballistics solver, I've found a 50-yard zero to be greatly beneficial, because I can hold dead-on from 25-60 yards and still hit a relatively small target. Additionally, for my ammo and rifle, a 50-yard zero does not require dialing below my zero more than .1 mil (only at 40 yards), extremely handy if you have a zero stop or you have a Kahles K624i like I'm using, which allows for .3 mil of travel below zero. The other plus is that you will almost always find a 50-yard target when going to the range which you can use to for zeroing.

2) Range the Target. When you're talking that a 10-yard error can equate to a difference of .5 mils of elevation, you better have the right target distance or else you're missing. So take the time to range each of your targets. I like to lase each target about three times and average the distance.

3) Pace Yourself. Depending on the match and scoring type, speed is not always necessary. Instead, using the time allotted to take methodical and precise shots outweighs finishing the stage first; especially if you're limited to a specific round count. Get into a smooth rhythm and stick with it. You'll see with practice and experience, speed will come naturally.

4) Shooter Ready? I've been guilty of saying "ready"—when I wasn't. The point is you should have a checklist that you go through every time before you give the thumbs up to the range officer. One that covers the basics and one that is also specific to the rifle system you're utilizing. You'll easily come up with your own list after some experience, but here's a few ideas to get you going:

- Mag is seated correctly, and your ammo is sitting the way it needs to be for a smooth chamber.
- Scope caps up.
- Chamber flag removed.
- Elevation and Windage turret indicate what you want.
- Parallax corrects.
- Spare mag.
- Rifle in working condition.

5) Dial. As long as time permits and the target distance and size warrant it, I prefer to dial elevation instead of holding over with the reticle. The reason is simple in my mind—depending on target size, if you're off by .1-.2 mil—that can be a miss with a rimfire. Therefore, I will almost always dial during a positional stage. That being said, if you can get into a stable position and the targets are very generous, you can often get away with hold overs and a fast finish.

6) Wind. Correctly reading the wind is one of the most difficult skills of long range precision shooting. It's the factor that is learned by experience. You can read about it and use tools to measure the values directly at the shooting position, but it's very unlikely that you can accurately measure the conditions between the gun and target. When you pair this with a small rimfire projectile, limited velocity, and ultimately very low ballistic coefficient; it makes the skill of wind "DOPING" that much more important for long-distance rimfire impacts. This is why rimfire is an excellent training platform.

- Direction: What direction is the wind blowing? Look for indicators such as vegetation (grass, trees, and leaves), dust, mirage, and simply which side of your face you feel the wind. Also, be conscious of these indicators between the gun and target for the next step.
- Wind speed: The Kestrel is one of the simplest tools for the job. It can accurately measure the wind speed at your shooting position but not at your target. This is why you need to be observant of the indicators mentioned above all the way out to the target. Experience is the best way to learn and identify what long range wind really "looks" like, there is no substitute.
- Target size: Particularly the width of the target becomes a factor of how much windage you may want to hold, use the width to your advantage. It's not often that the wind holds a constant value throughout your time on the clock, you may want to use your ballistic calculator (or Kestrel Elite) to "bracket" windage holds based on the high and low wind speeds. You may have a target that is a wide enough to cover your entire bracket. This is helpful if the wind picks up while you are shooting, be aware of any changes you feel or see through your riflescope. Don't be surprised to see a direction change, it happens! Spot your own impact, trust your rifle system, and correct to make impacts. Again, there is no substitute for experience in reading the wind and it's always easier said than done.
